January 2012 update from Ken Millwood

Dear All,

Welcome to my latest update on the book.

I've had a productive time since the last report so pleased to say its working having Monday's at home to work on the book. I have been focussing this month on chapters 5 & 6 about how we can depend on God's Word (the Bible) and the Holy Spirit. The overall word count is now just over 40,000, statistically 80% of what I'm aiming for.

According to a life languages course I did at work last week I'm good at starting projects and not so hot at completing them, so the tricky part will now be completing the bits I've left until later so I can finish the rest of the chapters. There are only a few chapters that need a lot of work – and I have started the background reading on these – on the area of other dependencies [i.e. addictions] so I can provide a rounded overview of the whole topic.

I also received comments from a few friends on the four draft cover designs and met with my graphic designer last week. I have told him which draft cover I want to go with and a revised draft will be ready in early February. This will then provide the basis for the graphics on the website. The idea of the website being to keep folks updated about when it will be available and include information about me and what's in it to generate more widespread interest in the book before it is printed.

There is still nothing quite like what I am writing out there on "Total Dependence on God" which is great for me, but a definite lack for the general reading public.

Finally, of great interest to me if no-one else, I got my self assessment tax return for 2010-11 submitted by the deadline before HMRC went on a one day strike. I am planning to get the next one in a bit earlier (I also said that about this one...).

The next update will be around Easter time.

Kind Regards,

Ken
